Oxford dictionary app english to tamil

You might consider upgrading automatic features. I accept the disclaimer that the word on a given day is generated randomly. However, that's why users can't adjust, not the fact that it makes developers unable to fix the software. The problem I see is it's only if you are that word is too simple. My experience with such novels is that they focus on words that are not often found in general use to expand vocabulary. On the other hand, your app provides desperate common nouns and verbs every day. For example, rodeo and nibble, respectively, are the two most recent deals. Therefore, this feature is not the best information, and unless it turns off all notifications, it's a nuisance. A prominent OED should broaden the minds and vocabulary of educated users, not responding to the popularity of seeking minimal contributions among the crowd. Please consider this appropriate upgrade of your software. Thank you for your attention to my concerns. I mean creatively indeed, as a long-time faithful, adherence to the OED, there are many cases where thoroughly understanding English can be useful, whether it is creating a word paper or searching for definitions of words that do not know the dictionary. This English Oxford is indispensable.
